Export Marketing research is a subject of considerable interest to our Department, to Ontario manufacturers and to businessmen who are or who may be interested in exports. The Foreign Market Studies which are undertaken by our Section, are written for use by our Trade and Industry Division, and specifically by our Marketing Branch and Trade Mission members. These studies depict the economic background of the countries that will be visited. For this reason our Foreign Market Studies are working documents designed for the use of the Department and cannot be taken either explicitly or implicitly as expressing the opinion or position of the Department of Trade and Development.

INTRODUCTION

General economic conditions in West Germany have seldom been more favourable for the Canadian businessmen thinking of exporting to the Federal Republic. At present the economy of the Federal Republic is straining to new heights of activity, characterised by extreme labour tightness, record order backlogs and lengthening delivery times.

In 1970 the GNP is expected to grow by about 6% in real terms, which is very respectable if somewhat less than the 8% recorded in 1969.

Boom conditions persist despite a stringent liquidity squeeze and a revaluation of the D-Mark by 9.3% last year. There has been a recent drop in foreign orders which may reflect the impact of the revaluation, but the slack has been taken up by rising domestic consumption. There has not been the slowing of the upward price trend that was expected to follow devaluation. Instead the general price level i.e. the difference between the GNP at current and constant dollars is expected to rise 6.5% which compares with 3.3% in 1969 and 1.6% in 1968.

West Germany's major anti-inflationary policies have consisted of cutting public expenditure and curtailing liquidity including a rise in Bank rate to a post war record 7½%. Now, however, the government is suspending tax write-offs for the six months to January 1971 and is imposing a 10% refundable surcharge on personal and corporate taxation.

Germany today is the second largest trading nation in the world after the U.S. It has been estimated that in 1970 German exports would rise by 6% and imports by 10%. However, in the first third of 1970 the imports of the Federal Republic have grown by 14% and her exports by 12% over the same period in 1969.

The Federal Republic offers a free and open market with very few restrictions. The business climate, though competitive, is friendly to imports. Almost all goods from Canada may be imported without a licence but an import declaration stamped by the Bundesbank or an appropriate 'Land' bank, is required. Since West Germany is a member of the EEC, imports into the Federal Republic are subject to the EEC's Common External Tariff. There are no problems over payments for imports or over credit facilities.

The Canadian or Ontario producer considering the West German market will be faced by the challenge of a market of over 60 million people who enjoy one of the fastest rising standards of living in the world. The GNP of $174 billion in 1969 was the third largest in the western world. West Germany at present is Canada's second largest market in Europe. In 1969, Canada exported goods worth $277 million to the Federal Republic.

Officially the Federal government welcomes foreign investment in Germany. The Bonn government has refused to impose any limitations on new investments coming from outside the country. No discrimination is exercised against foreign companies operating in Germany.

GENERAL INFORMATION

1. Geography and Climate

West Germany is located in North West Europe and is bordered by nine countries, the North Sea and the Baltic Sea.

The area of the Federal Republic including West Berlin is 95,930 square miles. West Germany is divided into eleven 'Länder' which are autonomous but not sovereign states enjoying wide legislative powers. These are: (1) North Rhine Westphalia (with its capital at Düsseldorf); (2) Lower Saxony (Hanover); (3) Schleswig-Holstein (Kiel); (4) Hamburg; (5) Bavaria (Munich); (6) Hesse (Weisbaden); (7) Bremen; (8) Rhineland Palatinate (Mainz); (9) Baden-Württemberg (Stuttgart); (10) Saar (Saarbrücken); (11) West Berlin is a 'Land' under German Constitutional law but this law is at present suspended under three power reservations.

North Rhine-westphalia with 17 million people and Bavaria with a population of 10 million are the two most populous Länder.

West Germany consists of the following distinctive physical regions: (a) the North German Plain; (b) the Mittelgebirge; (c) the South German Alpine Foothills and (d) the Bavarian Alps.

Most of West Germany is drained by rivers which flow northwards into the North Sea or the Baltic Sea. The Rhine with its tributaries, the Mosel and the Main, is the Federal Republic's most important waterway. Further east flow the Ems, the Weser and the Elbe. In the south the Danube flows from west to east on its way to the Black Sea. The Rhine-Main-Danube canal presently under construction will enable ships to go from the North Sea to the Black Sea.

The largest cities are West Berlin (2.2 million inhabitants); Hamburg (1.8 million) and Munich (1.2 million). Other large cities are Düsseldorf, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Cologne, Dortmund, Essen, Hanover and Bremen. Bonn, the seat of the West German Federal government, has a population of 300,000.

West Germany has a temperate climate with prevailing westerly winds and rainfall throughout the year. Average July temperatures lie between 65°F and 75°F, and average January temperatures fall in the range 20°F to 30°F. Annual rainfall throughout the country averages about twenty-seven inches and falls throughout the year.

2. Human Resources

West Germany (including West Berlin) had a total population just over 61 million in mid-1969, giving a population density of 635 per square mile. Over 30% of the population lives in the 53 cities of over 100,000 inhabitants.

The age distribution of the population was as follows:

	1961	1968
Under 15	21%	23%
15-65	67	64
65+	12	13
	<hr/>	<hr/>

Fifty-one percent of the population are Protestants, 44% Roman Catholic and 5% belong to smaller religious groups. The official language is German.

GNP per capita in 1969 was $2,850. Germany's standard of living is one of the highest in Europe. The number of illiterates is insignificant. Attendance at a recognized school for at least eight years is mandatory. In 1967 there were 7.8 million children attending schools providing a general primary or secondary education, 2.3 million at vocational schools and 360,000 at institutes of higher learning. The Federal Republic has 36 universities and technical colleges.

The size of the labor force in 1969 was 26.8 million. Of this, 10% was in agriculture, forestry and fishing; 40% in manufacturing, mining and power; 8% in construction; 12% in trade; 5% in transportation and communications; 15% in services, banking and insurance, and 10% in public administration and non-profit organizations.

About 30% of the labor force belongs to trade unions. Wages and working conditions are negotiated by the unions and employers associations on a regional pattern setting basis. This takes place under the labor law which has substituted collective bargaining for individual contracts with employees.

Recent years have been marked by a continuing shortage of workers. Unemployment is negligible - less than 1% of the labor force. Rising wages have attracted many women and agricultural workers into industry. German employers are hiring large numbers of foreigners - over 1.5 million in January 1970 - of whom the majority were Italians, Yugoslavs, Turks, Greeks and Spaniards. The cities with the largest groups of foreign workers are Munich, Stuttgart and Frankfurt.

3. Constitution and Government

West Germany is a democratic federation of states. The territory of the Federal Republic is divided into eleven "Länder" or States of which one is West Berlin. West Berlin, surrounded by East Germany, is closely integrated into West Germany's political, economic and administrative system, and adopts nearly all Federal legislation.

The Federal Republic's government is parliamentary in form and consists of a bi-cameral legislature, an independent judiciary and an executive branch whose principal powers are vested in the Chancellor.

The two legislative chambers are:

- (a) The Bundestag, whose 496 members are elected by direct popular vote and where the Christian Democratic Party has the largest number of members, followed by the Social Democrats and the Free Democrats.
- (b) The Bundesrat, composed of delegates appointed by the various State governments.

West Berlin is represented in each chamber by non-voting members.

The Federal Government consists of the Federal Chancellor and his ministers. The present cabinet is a coalition of Social and Free Democrats under Chancellor Brandt (SDP) and was formed in October, 1969.

The Federal President, currently Dr. Gustav Heinemann, is elected by a special Federal Assembly for a term of five years and represents West Germany in international relations.

The Federal judicial system has at the highest level a Federal constitution court which is responsible for interpreting the "Basic Law" and deciding constitutional differences between the Länder (States) and the Federal Republic. The States are granted all rights not specified to the Federal Government.

The "Basic Law" of 1949 serves as the Constitution until the conclusion of a peace treaty permits the establishment of a government for a United Germany.

STRUCTURE OF THE ECONOMY

1. General

Today, West Germany is one of the great industrial powers of the world - prosperous, stable and influential. The GNP of $174 billion in 1969 was fourth largest in the world after that of the US and USSR and Japan.

	Gross National Product
	1966	1967 % of Total	1968	1969
Private Consumption	57	58	56	55
Government Consumption	16	17	16	16
Gross fixed Investment	25	23	23	24
Inventory Changes	0.4	-0.7	1.9	2.2
Trade balance	1.3	3.3	3.4	2.5

The manufacturing mining and power industries contributed 54% of the GNP; trade, transportation and communication 19%; agriculture, forestry and fishing 3.6%; banking, insurance and other (24%). The contribution of agriculture and forestry has fallen from 10% in 1950 to 3.6% in 1969.

The tremendous growth in output of the German economy since the last war, has been made possible largely by a very high rate of investment in plant and equipment, which has averaged approximately 25% of GNP since 1950. Personal consumption has averaged just under 60% and government consumption about 15%.

The Federal Republic has relied heavily on private enterprise to accomplish the post war economic recovery. Today West Germany is characterized by a free market economy with a minimum of controls. However, as elsewhere in Europe, most of the facilities for transportation and communications and the bulk of the utilities are publicly owned.

The Federal Republic has followed generally conservative, monetary, fiscal and budgetary policies.

The substantial balance of payments surplus in recent years has led to the strengthening of the mark and in October 1969 there took place the revaluation of the D-mark which had the effect of making German exports 9.3% more expensive and German imports 8.5% less expensive.

2. Agriculture, Forestry and Fishing

More than half of the Federal Republic's area of 60 million acres is cultivated or grazing land.

The chief grains grown are rye, wheat, oats and barley. Apples and pears are the principal fruit crops. Cherries, peaches and viniculture are also important. Other important food crops are potatoes and sugar beets.

In 1969, the livestock population in West Germany was as follows: horses 250,000; cattle 4 million; pigs 19 million; sheep 0.8 million; chickens 90 million.

While Germany has been traditionally a net importer of food, the degree of self sufficiency has been further reduced since World War II. At present the Federal Republic must import about one quarter of its food requirements. This situation has resulted from the loss of the agricultural provinces in the East and an increase in demand resulting from the rising standard of living and population growth.

Over 560,000 farms have closed down since 1949 in the Federal Republic. This represents a 25% decline in the number of agricultural enterprises. The Governments 'Green Report 1970' indicates that by 1980 agricultural production will justify the employment of no more than 1 million people - compared with 2.3 million at present - if they are to enjoy a living standard comparable to the rest of the population.

German agriculture, which is surprisingly backward in parts, is subject to considerable Government control and subsidy. Agricultural imports are subject to greater restriction than are manufactured or raw material imports, imposed mainly, through the Common Agricultural Policy of the E.E.C.

Twenty-eight percent of the total land area is under forest, two-thirds of which is coniferous. Annual cuttings range between 23 and 27 million cubic yards of solid wood, under the scientifically managed forest policy.

The annual average catch of the German fishing fleet has been just over half a million metric tons in recent years. Herring, codfish and ocean perch compose most of the catch. Cuxhaven, Bremerhaven, Hamburg and Kiel are the chief fish-landing ports.

3. Mining

West German Mineral Production

	Million Metric Tons
	1966	1967	1968	1969
Coal	126	112	112	112
Lignite	98	97	102	-
Iron Ore	2.6	2.4	2.1	2.1
Potash (K ₂ O)	2.3	2.1	2.2	-

Coal is the most important mineral resource of the Federal Republic. Mining conditions are much different from those of North America because of the depth of the deposits and the thinness of the seams. These reserves of high grade bituminous coal are the most important in West Europe.

Reserves of brown coal and lignite are large and are located in the Cologne area.

Iron ore production satisfies only about 40% of domestic requirements.

Annual production of potash is one-quarter of world output and large amounts are exported.

The German output of crude petroleum only accounts for about one-tenth of the Federal Republic's consumption.

4. Industry

West Germany is the most important industrial state of Western Europe.

The Federal Republic's well developed and highly diversified manufacturing industries are concentrated in a belt which curves from Dortmund, Essen and Dusseldorf in the Rhur, through Cologne, Frankfurt, Ludwigshafen, Mannheim and Karlsruhe along the Rhine to Stuttgart. Other key industrial areas are located around Munich in the south, Hamburg-Bremen in the north, Hanover-Kassel along the East German border, and in West Berlin.

The Federal Government is still the owner of some very large industrial and commercial assets, valued at more than $1 billion. However, it is the government's stated policy to denationalize many of its holdings gradually.

Most of the Federal Government's industrial participation is channeled through three holding companies:
(a) VEBA - coal lignite and coal; (b) VIAG - steel, aluminum, chemicals, lignite; (c) A.G. fuer Berg-und Huettenbetriebe - iron, steel, coal, transport, engineering.

The local supply of raw materials in West Germany is large only in the case of coal and potash. Therefore to expand its manufacturing potential West Germany has historically had to rely on its main resources, a skilled labour force and managerial and technical know-how. The Federal Republic has become a great manufacturer of the more expensive kinds of sophisticated machinery, of equipment for industrial plants, and of precision and measurement instruments. Germany is nonetheless a major world producer of cement, iron and steel, aluminum, motor vehicles and ships.

Structure of Industry 1969

	Employment	Turnover $ bn
Machinery sector	1,130,000	15.1
Electrical products	1,020,000	12.5
Textiles and clothing	890,000	10.7
Chemicals	570,000	13.9
Vehicles	560,000	10.7
Iron and Steel	330,000	7.8
Oil refining	35,000	5.3
Total	8,310,000	138.7

In terms of both employment and turnover the machinery sector is the most important component of German industry, followed by the electrical products sector.

In 1969 the Federal Republics machinery output increased by about 20% in value. This is the highest rate since the boom of 1961.

The electrical industry has experienced an uninterrupted upswing for the past two years. 1970 is again expected to be a highly successful year. For the first time in the industry's history there are now over 1 million workers employed in this sector. The two giants of the German electrical industry are Siemens and AEG-Telefunken.

The chemical industry, which now employs almost 600,000 people, has for many years been one of the major growth industries. Turnover in 1970 is expected to be 12% higher than in 1969. The industry is an export intensive one with one third of total output sold abroad. The re-valuation of the D-mark should have some impact export sales. While West Germany accounts for only 7% of world chemical sales the high standard of the industry is demonstrated by the surplus of licences granted over those taken. However in 1969, the Federal Republic in 1969 maintained its position as the world's major producer of chemical fibres after the U.S. and Japan. Of growing importance is German chemical investment outside the Federal Republic. Favourite investment targets by the German chemical companies are the EEC countries, particularly Holland and Belgium, and the Americas. The giants of West Germany's chemical industry are Bayer, Hoescht and BASF.

The Federal Republic produced 3.5 million vehicles in 1969. Exports for the first time exceeded 2 million units. The automotive industry directly or indirectly provides employment for one seventh of West Germany's labor force. By 1980 it is estimated that there will be over 20 million cars on the road in Germany which will be equivalent to one for every 3.1 inhabitants, compared with 12 million today. Volkswagen is the largest firm in Germany. It sells cars to most countries in the world making most of them in Wolfsburg. Daimler Benz is the other major German producer. Ford and Opel are U.S. subsidiaries.

Total West German refinery capacity is expected to increase about 50% to over 170 million tons by 1975 from its present 120 million tons.

In 1969 total German iron and steel production reached an all time record. The Federal Republic produced 34 million tons of pig iron, 45 million tons of crude steel and 31 million tons of rolled steel. The West German iron and steel industry is highly concentrated in the Rhur, The Saarland is another area of importance.

West Germany retained its fourth place position among the world steel producers, after the U.S., the U.S.S.R. and Japan.

World Steel Producers 1969
million tons

U.S.A.	132
U.S.S.R.	111
Japan	82
W. Germany	45

German shipyards have 8% of the world's total shipbuilding orders. While the Japanese shipyards continue to dominate in the construction of bulk carriers, German shipyards now hold the majority of all orders for high quality specialized ships. In the field of full containerships in particular, German shipyards hold a leading position in the world.

5. Public Utilities

a) Energy

The Federal Republic is now generating 40% of the electricity in the common market countries. In 1969 total production of electricity was over 225 billion kilowatt hours. About 63% of the installed generating capacity is in the hands of the public utilities, about 36% is in industrial power, mainly in coal mines, chemical plants and iron and steel plants, and 1% in the Federal Railways.

About 76% of the electricity production comes from thermal stations and hard coal is more important than brown coal as a source of power. The relative importance of hydro-electric power has been declining slightly in recent years.

Atomic power stations generated 2.1% of total electricity production in 1969. However traditional fuels are expected to remain of major importance for at least another decade.

The Federal Republic is a net importer of electric power. West Germany's natural gas output has been rising very impressively in recent years. Thus whereas 2.2 billion cubic metres were produced in 1965 this had risen to 8.2 billion cubic metres by 1969.

It is expected that the Federal Republic will consume 120 million tons of petroleum products in 1970, 9% more than in 1969. By 1975 consumption could be 150 million tons and 185 million tons by 1980.

b) Transportation

The Federal Republic has a highly developed system of transport by rail, inland waterways, road and air.

The railway system totals 18,000 miles, of which nearly 85% is operated by the Federal Railways. The remainder is owned and operated by private interests or communities. Conversion of the Federal Railways from steam-operated engines to electric and diesel engines is steadily taking place. About one-quarter of the total network is now electrified. There has been a steady decline in the number of passengers, especially commuters, using the railways - down from 1,075 million in 1965 to 937 million in 1967 for example. However the number of freight tons carried has increased in the last couple of years to 380 million tons in 1969.

In 1970 there were 13.0 million passenger cars in use and around one million trucks. An ambitious roadbuilding program was initiated in 1959, which will be completed in 1970. The Federal Republic has about 97,000 miles of classified roads of which 3,000 miles are modern freeways.

The amount of freight carried by truck - mainly ores, iron and steel and wool - has been steadily increasing in recent years but still falls short of the amount carried by the inland waterways and by the railways.

The most important waterways in the Federal Republic are the Rhine with its tributaries, and the canal network between the Ruhr and Emden. The inland waterway fleet now consists of some 7,700 ships. Traffic on the inland waterways has increased because of the expanding German economy and its increasing demand for coal, ores, oil and other industrial raw materials.

The West German sea going merchant fleet now exceeds 7.5 million tons.

Civil air transport is a late comer in the German post war transport field. Lufthansa began commercial operations in 1955 and now connects West German cities with others in Europe, North and South America, Africa, the Near, Middle and Far East. The Federal Government is the principal holder of Lufthansa stock. The Federal Republic has five international airports at Frankfurt, Berlin, Dusseldorf, Hamburg and Munich.

c) Communications

The Federal Post Office has a monopoly on postal service and telecommunications. It collects radio receiver and TV license fees for the broadcasting organizations.

In 1970 there were over 19.4 million radio receivers in West Germany, 16.0 million TV sets and 12.5 million telephones.

Radio broadcasting is in the hands of 11 separate networks set up under public law in the Federal Republic and West Berlin. Advertising is only permitted at certain times and the system is supported by license fees. West Germany has developed the finest network of VHF stations in Europe.

With TV broadcasting there are nine state corporations which jointly program and transmit the First Program. The Third Program is more local and consists of programs produced individually or in groups by the state corporations. The Second Program is financed by license and distributed nation-wide on the transmission facilities of the German Post Office.

6. Finance

a) The Monetary System

The West German currency unit is the Deutsche Mark (D-mark) which is divided into 100 pfennigs. The exchange rate is presently US$1 = 3.66 DM. The D-mark was revalued by 9.3% in October 1969.

Since West Germany is a Federal State the financial transactions of the Länder have to be considered as well as those of the Federal Government. The Federal Government receives 63% of total governmental tax revenues in Germany and the Länder 37%.

The main sources of government tax revenues in the Federal Republic are income taxes and value added taxes.

Foreign workers in the Federal Republic transferred over $700 million to their home countries in 1969.

One of the major results of the March 1970 Bank rate rise to 7½% was to halt the tremendous outflow of German funds into the more lucrative Eurodollar market. The bank rate has risen from 3% in early 1969 to 6% by September 1969 and was 7.5% in March 1970.

b) The Banking System

Following the 1957 legislation, the authority of the Federal Government over the central banking system was increased. The system now consists of the German Bundesbank (Federal Bank) and the 'Länd' Central Banks which are the main offices of the Federal Bank in the states. The Federal Bank has its headquarters at Frankfurt, West Germany's main banking and financial centre.

The Federal government cannot interfere with the open market operations of the Bank, dictate credit policy, or recall members of the Directorate. On the other hand, the Federal Bank is obliged to support the Government's policy pursuant to its task of insuring the stability of the currency.

There are 350 commercial banks in the Federal Republic. The three big branch banks, the Deutsche Bank A.G., the Dresdner Bank A.G. and the Commerzbank A.G. have combined assets which account for 45% of total commercial bank assets.

The state, regional and local banks which number more than 100, also control 45% of total commercial bank assets. There are also 200 private banks in the commercial banking field, as well as Bank Cooperatives concentrating on serving workers, and Mortgage Banks which are principally concerned with home building and municipal development.

Commercial banking has become one of the main growth sectors of the economy. During the past two years the German banks which were once primarily engaged in domestic business have assumed a major role in international finance. This development has been aided by the German export boom and supported by the Bundesbank.

The special banks in West Germany include the Reconstruction Loan Corporation established in 1948 for the purpose of German reconstruction, but which now channels long term credits to developing countries; the Export Credit Corporation; the Industry Credit Corporation for small and medium manufacturers; and the Equalisation of Burden's Bank.

There are over 850 savings banks operating on a non-profit basis which engage in short term deposit transactions.

c) The Stock Exchange

West Germany has eight stock exchanges: Berlin, Bremen, Dusseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Hanover, Munich and Stuttgart. All trading on German stock exchanges is conducted by the banks.

d) Investment

Officially the Federal Republic welcomes foreign investment. However, there has been some private opposition to the granting by local and state authorities of tax incentives and low cost land to foreign investors. The Bonn Government has refused however to impose any limitations on new investment coming in from outside the country.

Between 1961 and the end of 1969 the net nominal value of foreign direct investment in West Germany totalled $5.5 billion, about half of which came from the U.S. and the bulk of the rest from Europe. The market value is perhaps worth four times as much. Foreigners own very significant percentages of the oil industry, the food and beverage industries, the automobile industry, and the electrical industry.

There is no government approval mechanism for foreign investment in Germany. Foreigners can establish or purchase enterprises in Germany without special license, acquire securities, land or mortgages and transfer abroad unlimited dividends and interest. Foreign investors are required only to inform the branches of the Bundesbank of their investment for statistical purposes.

Certain businesses are subject to special license, e.g., restaurants, passenger transportation insurance, savings buildings and loan banks and associations. However, this requirement applies to Germans as well.

All firms located in Germany and registered in the Commercial Register must join the local Chamber of Industry and Commerce.

A business can be organized in Germany under a variety of legal forms. Most German businessmen choose a limited liability company (GmbH), as do most foreign investors.

Foreign firms operating in Germany usually prefer partly or wholly owned subsidiaries to a branch office. These subsidiaries will normally be limited liability companies, or less frequently, stock companies (AG).

Tax considerations determine the preference for legally independent subsidiaries over branches.

Foreign owners of a branch operation have to pay more German taxes than they would for a corporation.

West Germany's direct investment abroad reached $4.7 billion in 1969 56% of this has been made in Europe, namely in the EEC and EFTA countries. Investments in N. America have reached $1 billion. Less than one third of the Federal Republic's investments have been made in the developing countries. The leading industrial sectors in which these investments have been made are chemicals, electrical engineering, and automobiles.

7. Tourism

In 1968, over six and a half million people visited Germany. The main countries of origin were the United States, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, France, Denmark, Belgium and Luxembourg.

Receipts from tourism in 1968 totalled over $1 billion and expenditures $1.8 billion, giving Germany a deficit on tourist account of around $800 million.

FOREIGN TRADE

a) The Structure of Foreign Trade

Foreign trade has steadily become more important to the German economy. Germany ranks second only to the United States in total value of trade amongst the world trading nations.

In 1969 German commodity exports rose by 14% to $31.1 billion and imports rose 21% to $26.2 billion in comparison with 1968. Thus 18% of the Federal Republic's GNP is exported and over 15% of West German consumption is met by imports.

W. German exports consist primarily of finished products - 67% of the total. Other important export groups are semi-manufactures (19%) and semi-processed goods (8%). Imports of finished manufactures account for 32% of the import bill. Food and beverage imports (20%) and imports of raw materials (15%) are also important.

West Germany is a member of the European Economic Community. The other member countries are Italy, the Netherlands, France, Belgium and Luxembourg. The customs union was completed in 1968. intra-community tariffs have been abolished on industrial goods and the common external tariff is in force. Tariff cuts in the common external tariff took place as a result of the Dillon and Kennedy Rounds under GATT and further reductions are scheduled for January 1971 and 1972. Common market agricultural products are protected by a system of variable import levies and minimum import prices applied at EEC borders.

It is not surprising that the major market for West Germany's exports is the rest of the EEC, which took 40% of her exports in 1969. EFTA (22%) and the U.S. (9%) are the other major markets. Canada took only 1% of the Federal Republic's exports last year.

The other member countries in the EEC supplied West Germany with 43% of her import requirements in 1969. The EFTA countries provided 15% and the U.S. 11%. Canada in 1969 accounted for only about 1% of the Federal Republic's import requirements.

Trade with East Germany is considered to be 'inter-zonal' trade and does not feature in the external trade accounts. In 1969 exports from the Federal Republic to East Germany were worth $590 million and imports $420 million. The trade balance was therefore strongly in West Germany's favour.

b) Analysis of West Germany's Exports

In 1969 the Federal Republic exported goods to the value of $31.1 billion.

One of the most important items that West Germany exports is road motor vehicles and aircraft which were worth $4.6 billions in 1969. 25% of these exports went to the U.S. Other major markets were France, the Netherlands and Italy.

Exports of electrical machinery and equipment are also very important. These were worth $2.8 billion in 1969, the bulk of which went to West Germany's common market partners especially France and Holland.

The largest category of W. German exports is machinery. The Federal Republic has very significant exports of machine tools, textile machinery, agricultural machinery, power generating equipment and office machinery.

Exports of chemicals - both semi manufactures and finished products are very large. In 1969 these were worth $3.9 million. About one third of these exports went to the other common market countries.

West German exports of foodstuffs, raw materials and mineral fuels are relatively insignificant

CANADIAN TRADE WITH WEST GERMANY

1. General

The pattern of trade between Canada and West Germany in recent years has consisted of the exchange of sophisticated West German products for Canadian raw materials.

Market Opportunities for Canadian and Ontario Exports

The continuing strong German domestic demand provides a favourable climate for Canadian exports.

Electronics, chemicals and specialized machinery may be cited for their market potential in the Federal Republic. There are good growth prospects too in the areas of automotive equipment, instrumentation and control equipment, medical and surgical equipment, packaging materials, and sophisticated packaging and handling machinery.

It is broadly true to say that the German market is wide open to almost every type of Canadian products, provided that it is competitive. The tariff is not prohibitive although the Federal Republic's membership in the EEC gives Canada's Common Market competitors an advantage.

In West Germany there are good opportunities for Canadian exporters to expand existing exports and introduce new lines of goods.

The pressure on wages in the current tight labor market and the need to re-equip many existing plants to remain competitive have given rise to demands for all types of labor-saving devices. One of the dominant trends in the Federal Republic today is towards mechanization, rationalization and automation in both the industrial and domestic sectors. The result is an expanding demand for automated equipment, automatic vending machines and labor-saving office equipment. Items like dishwashers, mixers, and prepared food products are becoming popular because of the increasing number of housewives entering the labor force.

Imports of paper and paperboard into Germany are now dominated by European producers, principally Scandinavian. The rising consumption of paper and paperboard in West Germany may also mean increasing opportunities for Canadian exporters. Future Scandinavian sources of supply are inadequate to meet the growing European demand.

West Germany ranks third among the world automobile manufacturers. The potential is there for exports of automotive parts and equipment, and also for automotive maintenance and service equipment.

There are possibilities to expand Canadian exports of building materials to the Federal Republic. About one million German dwellings are unfit for habitation and will have to be demolished.

Canadian exports of consumer items should also be explored as West German prosperity increases and with it the demand for more variety and choice. The recreational field especially offers a very exciting and very challenging market.

Should the Canadian and Ontario exporter accept the challenge of the West German market, Canada should achieve an increasing share of an increasing market.

Generally it should be noted that the Federal Republic is a sophisticated market. The Ontario exporter should have some knowledge of marketing conditions such as design and styling, pricing, packaging, advertising, sales promotional techniques and after sales service in Germany. It should not be assumed that one could effectively cover the whole market with agents in Hamburg and Frankfurt for example. It is important that all sales literature and correspondence is in German, that all prices are quoted cif in Deutsch Marks, and that measurements are given in metric terms.

ECONOMIC AND TRADE POLICY

1. Foreign Trade Policy

Germany has no import restrictions, quotas or licenses with the exception of a few sensitive industrial products, principally from Japan and Hong Kong and all goods originating in the Sino-Soviet bloc are subject to import licensing. Common Market agricultural products are protected by a system of variable import levies and minimum import prices applied at EEC borders.

The Federal Republic's tariff level is that of the common external tariff of the EEC for imports from the outside world - and is therefore fairly high. Imports from other EEC countries into Germany are duty free on industrial goods. Internal duties on agricultural products have been removed in stages by the implementation of common marketing policies for groups of products providing for common price levels.

The German authorities may levy anti-dumping duties provided the complaining local producers prove they have suffered damages. Germany also has the usual array of local buying preferences and packaging, food and drug, and trade mark laws, all of which sometimes act as import barriers.

2 Marketing Channels

The Germans are perhaps the most trade fair conscious buyers in the world. There is a special commodity trade fair in Germany to fit nearly every exporter's requirement. The trade fairs are very popular with both buyers and sellers; so much so that the trade fair medium is too important to be overlooked.

The trade fair method can be used not only to expose products to the market but also to find a reliable agent, since the the German agents will attend trade fairs in their field on the lookout for new lines and products. In short the trade fair is the quickest, most efficient way to test the German market, to compare prices and quality with competitive products and to meet potential agents and distributors.

Another possible way to win export sales to Germany is by approaching Germany's big buyers, i.e. the department stores and the mail order houses. These giant organizations have a combined purchasing power of several billion dollars.

It is interesting to note that Germans spend per capita nearly four times as much on mail order purchases as North Americans.

There is a trend towards more supermarkets, shopping centres, and speciality boutiques.

3 Agency Agreements

The commercial and civil codes apply to the principal-agent relation. Under the law "choice of law" clauses are allowed; waivers of agents rights are not recognized.

The commercial code provides minimum termination notice terms. An indefinite term agreement may be terminated upon due notice and for just cause. Compensation generally amounts to benefits that would have accrued during the omitted notice period. Compensation for goodwill may not exceed an average year's commission.

4. Licensing, Patents and Trade Marks

(a) Patents

Germany has now adopted a deferred examination patent system to replace the thorough, but lengthy, examination procedure. A patent application meeting formal requirements is registered and enjoys preliminary protection. After 18 months the application is laid open to public inspection and other firms are able to examine it in the light of their own industrial property rights. In the case of possible violation of existing rights, a thorough examination will be undertaken.

If the applicant for the protection of a patent does not reside in Germany, he must appoint a resident attorney. Fees for application rise from DM 30 in the first year to DM 1,700 in the eighteenth year.

(b) Trade Marks

Under the recent legislation registered trade marks must now be used to remain valid. If not used within Germany for five years they may be given to any other interested party upon application of that party.

(c) Licensing

No government approval is needed for the terms of licensing agreements, and payments of royalties to foreigners have been completely free.

In principal, tie-in clauses are not outlawed but such provisions may conflict with the German anti-trust law.

Know-how is recognized in Germany, as a licenseable commodity.

As a rule, licensing agreements in Germany are based on sales, often on a per unit basis.
